18. Other information:

- (1) In the Laboratory of Marine Environmental Science, marine environments from the open ocean to coastal waters are analyzed using physical and chemical oceanographic techniques in a multifaceted and comprehensive manner. Our research and education aim to secure marine living resources, evaluate the carrying capacity of marine environments, and conserve marine environments in biologically productive areas. We seek applicants who will conduct education and research on biogeochemical cycles, including air–sea exchange etc., in the subarctic North Pacific and the Arctic Ocean, with a primary focus on primary production processes. We are particularly interested in candidates who can use shipboard observations, such as those conducted onboard the training vessels of Hokkaido University, and who can demonstrate leadership in field-based research activities. We also seek candidates who will actively contribute to university administration.

- (2) Current members of the Laboratory of Marine Environmental Science (as of May 1, 2026):
Professors: Akihide KASAI, Atsushi OOKI, Hiromichi UENO, Daiki NOMURA
Associate Professors: Takeshi YOSHIMURA, Hatsumi NISHIKAWA
Assistant Professor: none (this applicant)
- (3) Working conditions follow the work rules set by Hokkaido University
